Women are underrepresented in almost all industries, one of the main ones being the music industry. Women only make up 21.7% of all artists, 12.3% of songwriters, and 2.1% of all music producers. In addition, women only made up 10.4% of the Grammy nominees for the most popular categories.

Sing, hear, express (SHE) is a non-profit organization located in Los Angeles, California that works to provide support to young girls with dreams of pursuing a career in the music industry. Although the organization is still small, with a single branch in Los Angeles, we hope to grow and be able to open up programs across the United States. SHE will start off with a summer camp, specifically designed for girls ages 8-18 with an interests in music careers like singing, songwriting, producing and much more, regardless of their background and experience in music. The program will mainly be led by other women working in the music industry. Girls will have the opportunity to enhance their skills and participate in leadership activities that focus on representation in the music industry.
